Homeschooling Things to Remember

- Your children are YOUR responsibility, which also means YOU'RE in charge - not a school, not a church, not your mother-in-law.
- You DO NOT have to follow anyone else's schedule - it's your schedule!
- You DO NOT have to teach every subject every day. You may get totally involved in a great history discussion and carried away in a project for the day - spelling can sometimes wait until tomorrow.
- You can take a field trip, or a break, anywhere, anytime you want - even if it's only the backyard.
- YOU are qualified to teach your children - you've been doing it since the moment they became a part of your family, you know them best and you have been giving them what they need from day 1, don't stop now, and don't ever think you're not good enough for the job.
- Your "homeschool" is not a school - it's your home - it's your life, no one limits or controls you except you. Homeschool is truly "Education Without Limits"!
- Your children are not un-socialized! (And you don't have to run them to a million activities to prove it.) Your children are better socialized because they are social with people from all age groups, which will prepare them more for real life.

Ten of the Best Things About Homeschooling

1. Curriculum - choosing your own curriculum, teach what you want, when you want.
2. Schedule - keep your own schedule, sleep in on Mondays, teach on weekends, snow days, Martin Luther King Day... it's all up to you!
3. Beliefs - your religion, your beliefs, have the influence on your children's beliefs that you deem to be right.
4. Habits - knowing that any bad habits they pick up are from you and not from someone you don't know.
5. Moments - the ability to turn every moment with your child into a lesson and every lesson into a moment with your child.
6. Time - spent growing, learning, laughing, loving & being together.
7. Peer Pressure - the only peer pressure or bullying you have to deal with, mostly, is with children that are all under your discipline.
8. Red Pen - free to use the "red pen" as much as you want!
9. Joy - you've been teaching them since day 1 in your family, there is no greater job in the world.
10. Expenses - no school clothes, lunch money, latest trends, things to worry about with "fitting in". They only have to "fit in" with your family, and your expenses are realistic things that fit in your budget.

Thoughts and Ideas, Learning and Organizing

When I first started homeschooling I was so organized I made myself sick because I over did everything for the school and not for us, I've become a little more lax since starting in 2001. But, then we also added a few more to the bunch since then, so I still have to keep a pretty tight ship, but with lots of flexibility too – a bit of an oxymoron there, but that's OK!

Also, there are a lot of changes we all go through in life, similar to natural selection, in everything we do. We learn, we grow, we change – and hopefully for the better. Just like with our first baby we jump at every time they fall and bump their head, by the time the 6th one comes along we check for blood, toss on a Band-Aid, and send them on their way because we realize every bump and bruise isn't life threatening.

Home education is no different, with the first child everything has to be just right and perfect, and as we go along, especially if adding other children to the family, we realize it doesn't matter if they know how to read by 4 or 8, and many of the things we worry about are not going to hinder their development. One of my reminder sayings is: "it all comes out in the wash".

So, the big thing to keep in mind is, don't waste time fretting now, save yourself the trouble, you'll just end up laughing at yourself in 10 years anyway. Instead, enjoy every minute of what you're doing, yes, do everything you can, but don't worry about what you can't get to every day. Time passes too swiftly not to enjoy it. Don't try to cram too much into a day, or your child right away – if they aren't joyful while they're learning, then step back and see what needs to change, pray and ask for guidance.

Just the same if you have little ones - rock them, hold them and love them. Spending loving time with your children is going to be more important in the long run than if they win the national spelling bee when they're six. And of course one of the best things to do when you're holding them and rocking is to read to them – if you want to.

You can read anything and everything, it doesn't have to be what the "experts" tell you is age-appropriate, or the latest best selling kid's book – more often than not, most of those cutesy books are actually mind numbing rather than stimulating, think Sesame Street. A study was done recently that showed watching 9 minutes of Sponge Bob gave children short-term learning problems, and after 20 minutes the effects could be permanent. Definitely gives you something to think about when it comes to what types of reading and programming you nourish your child with, and just because it has a Christian label on it doesn't always make it any better. Think of books, music, DVD's, TV shows, etc., as food for your child's brain and that helps to put things into perspective!

If you read your Bible to your 6 month old – he's learning more than you realize and you're giving him an excellent start just by spending time together. Poetry is one of the best things you can read to your little ones – poetry that rhymes creates logic in their little minds and helps them to understand things easier. Then they may win the national spelling bee at 13 instead, after enjoying being a child.

We all have also known how good music is for babies and young children. Classical music has been known to actually stimulate and plays a major part in brain development. This doesn't mean that the little electronic toy with a 30 second bit from Mozart is really good for your child. Instead, save a lot of money and find a set of Classical CD's at most any bookstore or online and play them in the background while you're children are playing, you're reading to them or spending time in the kitchen. Although, I must admit, I prefer Rock or Jazz when we're cooking, and especially cleaning, but Handel's "Hallelujah" is a welcome addition as well. I also really enjoy Bible songs – our favorites are the Twin Sisters. Music is good for the brain, and the soul.

The big thing to keep in mind is when you're raising children and want them to be well-educated, more is learned by the little things you do with them rather than spending a lot of money on curriculum to cram their heads with facts and figures. Instead focus on stimulating the love of learning and enjoy spending time together.

So, how about some organizational ideas? My main system is color-coding. I have a love for color, the rainbow and how it all fits together systematically, naturally. A little fact about me, when I was a kid my absolute favorite smell in the world was a brand new box of Crayola crayons... ok, well, it still is one of my favorite things... I color-code the kids, days of the week, seasons, subjects and chores. I've also found that colors are easy for kids of all ages to follow, and fun too – brightens things up nicely.

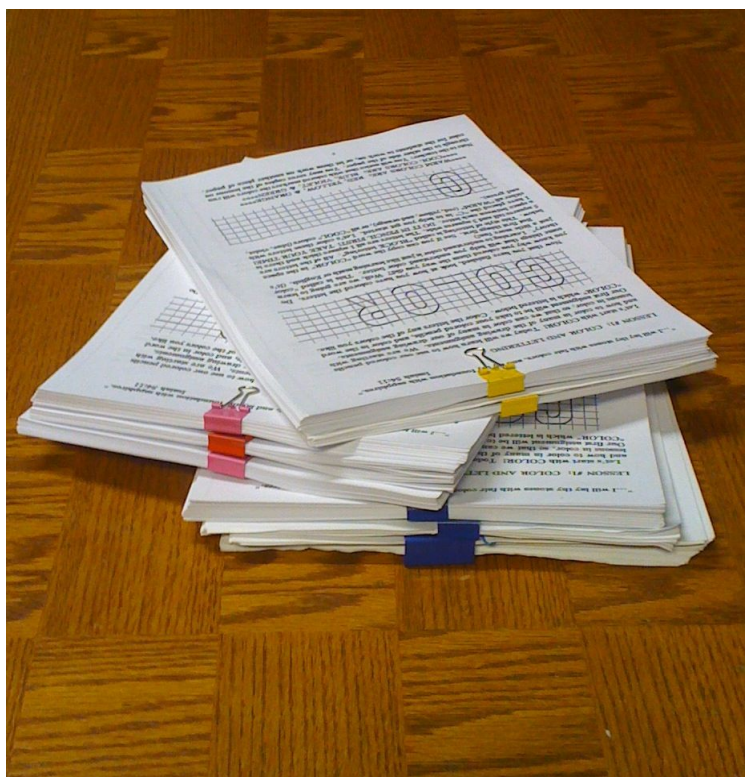

I pick a color for each child – this can be changed each year if you like, or always keep it the same. There are so many options out there these days with folders, binder clips, paper clips, pencils, scissors, binders, plastic tubs - just about anything you can think of comes in at least basic colors, or you can use stickers for things like glue bottles. If you want you can even use two different colors together - like complimentary colors or primary with secondary colors, and so on, however you wish.

For my 5th grader she gets yellow and green, 4th gets light and dark blues and K gets red and pink. So, it's not a set color scheme, but it works for us. You can see how I have the binder clips & paper clips below – which came together and were inexpensive at Target.

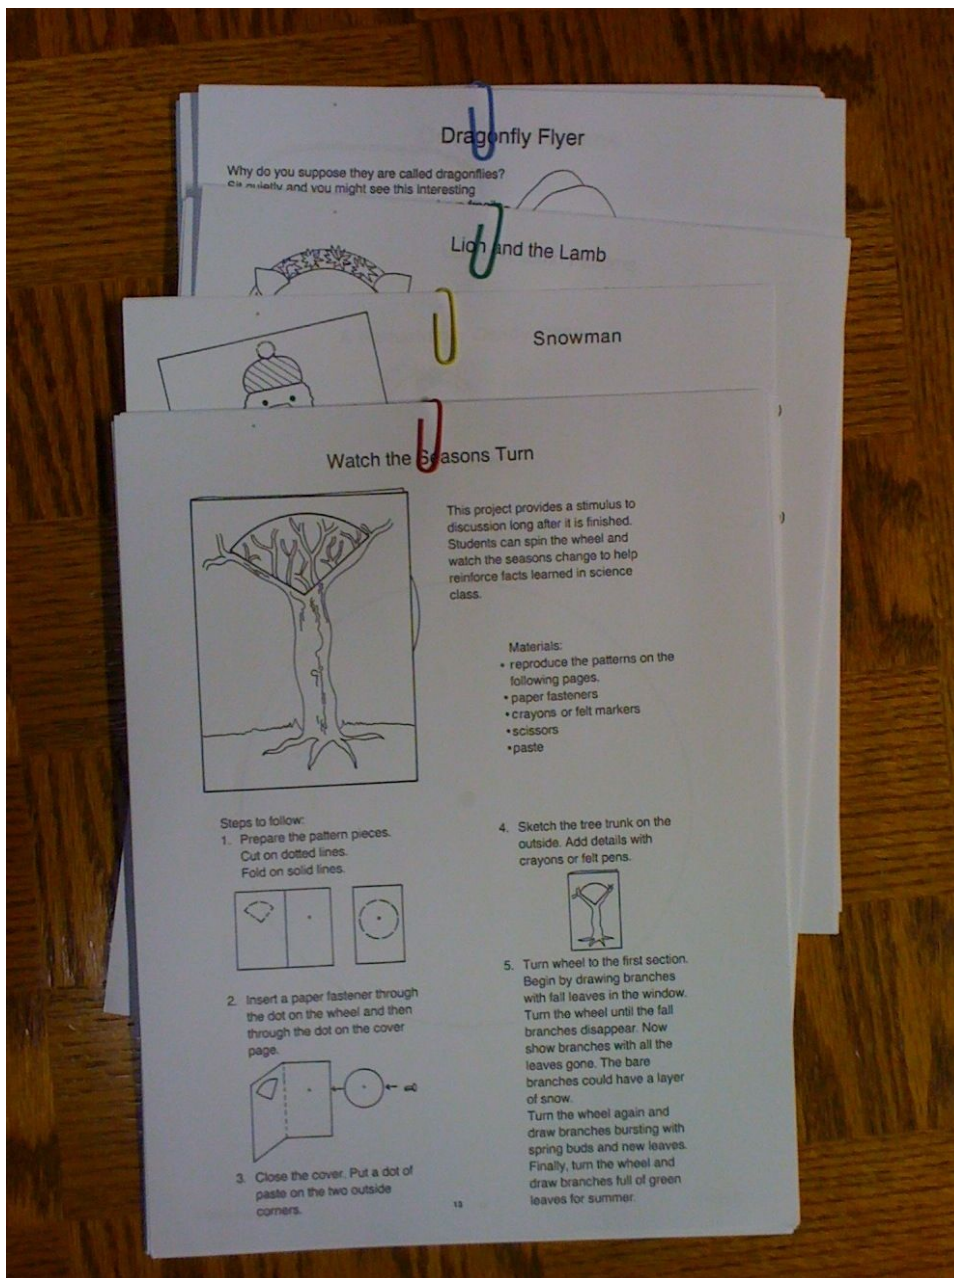

I also assigned a color to each season for our seasonal art curriculum. I use How Great Thou Art curriculum, with Art For All Seasons as supplemental projects. I used colored folders and copied the section pages, colored them and glued them to the front of the folders. Some of the projects have more than one page to accompany them and those have matching colored paper clips with them, as in the second picture.

So, what we do is we do a lesson from the How Great Thou Art curriculum 4 days a week and one seasonal project a week, or Artist study, and that is enough to cover the Art curriculum for the whole year for my grades K-5th, and it's all color-organized and ready.

When I started with one child I used a color to each day of the week, and put some pages in each folder for each day. That worked great for 1 and even two 2 kids who are close in age when my eldest was "too big for that". But the big problem was that I had to have another separate stack of papers for each child and then put them in the folders each week, it was getting into too many folders and more work for me to keep track of along with what the twins were getting into.

Now I prefer to use the binder clips for each subject with a color for each child, as it's simpler for me to keep them organized.

So mainly when the twins came along is where I switched my system up a bit into color-coding the kids instead of just days of the week. You could still use folders for either way - all one color for each kid and 5 per child, or with one or two children the rainbow for the week is fun.

I still use a little color-coding of the days of the week. I color code the chores that way - whatever is to be done on Wednesday is written in green on my chart, Monday is red, Tuesday Yellow, etc.

Or, you could instead write the chores or lesson plans in the child's color so they can look at all the blue chores or lessons they need to do for the day/week, and then another gets purple, for example.

Using color systems can really make organizing easier for both you and your children, and there's no reason not to have fun and enjoy every aspect of home education.

Just don't try so hard to organize that your brain frazzles and you decide to give up educating your children. Relax, none of this is required, and none of it will make you a better teacher/parent. What makes you the best teacher and parent is your children - you are what they need, that's why God gave them to you to care for and raise. He didn't give them to the Jones' down the street because they're better - He gave them to you, because YOU'RE the best for YOUR children, so don't let anyone, ever, make you feel inadequate.

About Me, Our Homeschool, About this Planner

Hi, my name is Galadriel Grace, owner of HomeschoolShirts.com and HeritageGroveAcademy.com. I have six kids whom I've been homeschooling since 2001 on paper, but really since 1995 when my first was born, since that's when we really start teaching our children.

I had decided when I became pregnant with my first that we were going to homeschool and God convicted me to do so when she was ready for Kindergarten even when the "fear" tried to convince me otherwise. We looked at other school options such as Christian schools, Montessori, and other methods but I managed to follow through with what I knew God wanted me to do. Everywhere I turned, I "heard" God telling me to homeschool. Coincidentally our first "official" day of school was 9/11/01, so that really cemented it in for us, and we never looked back.

At first I documented of every single thing – hours, days, everything that was "educational" - because I thought I had to, along with having set curriculum for every single subject. But fortunately, I was wrong and saw the error of my ways, because if I had kept up the way I was going I would have never made it past the second or third child. We have since become extremely eclectic in our curriculum, but still leaning towards a classical style, and also keep our schedule very flexible -which is more doable with a small bunch of different grade levels and interests.

We homeschooled in Pennsylvania for 12 years, so that's part of the reason I had gotten into the needless habit of over-planning and over record keeping – because it's such a "tough" state. I was stressing over all the pages and forms I had to have ready for the school and I didn't know how I was going to keep up with more kids coming along, especially the twins. I had been gradually lessening our portfolio thickness over the years, but I still felt like I was skimping or somehow doing something wrong because I wasn't showing enough.

Then one year my evaluator had gotten sick and needed surgery so I was forced to find a new one – fear stricken I did – oh no! Now I'm really going to have to do more paperwork to prove I'm a good mom-teacher! I'm sure that the whole thing was God's plan, because it turned out my new evaluator was the nicest person on earth, knew the state law inside and out and actually opened my eyes to what it really says – told me to stop stressing over trying to prove I was doing a good job. We ended up taking our binders that we used to turn in for portfolios and shrunk them down to a single folder with no more than 10 pages, and I found I only needed 2 forms to turn in – the book list and the paper from the evaluator. Wow, and I had been turning in a log of 180 days, making sure I was covering every day, every subject... blah, blah -you name it! I never felt so foolish, but at the same time relieved at the great burden that had been lifted! But in the process, not only did I learn a lot, I also found that I do like to plan things out somewhat detailed (but for myself) and have it for reference as we go through. All the sudden the papers that I stressed over because I had to fill them out became enjoyable and not detailed enough because now I was doing it for myself and I look forward to it. No, we do not always get to everything I plan when I plan it to be done, but we just simply carry it over. Doing this we also weed out what's really important for us to learn and don't do school just for the sake of it.

For us another way to de-stress and thoroughly enjoy our homeschool life again - even with the added children, was that we started to school year-round. At first, it was to "make-up" things missed during babies being born and other such life-altering events, but now because the kids LOVE it and nothing is ever missed - we don't have any "make-up" work. Also, on "summer vacation" I can't even tell you how many times the kids pestered me about wanting schoolwork to do! "Mom, when can we do school again?" became a daily question - which I guess was a good thing since they obviously enjoyed it.

So now we school year-round – taking small and large breaks as we want/need. For us it's a thousand times less stressful and we're never hurried to "finish" anything – we just take a smaller break and then pick up where we left off – and we do it more times a year, so there's more "vacations" instead of just one big one in the summer. This also makes it great for Dad's regular, but somewhat spontaneous, hiking trips or field trips. Plus, we spend more time relaxing over the winter holidays - actually being able to enjoy them and - big confession - inside in the cool house when it's too darn hot to be out there! For summer months we adjust our daily schedule so that the kids get to play outside during the cooler hours and are inside when it's super hot outside. Home educating year-round also makes it so that the kids don't have long breaks in between and are less likely to need as much review of what we were learning.

The main thing for every home education program is keeping it flexible – and that's more relaxing for everyone, no stressing. We simply strive to follow a God-led schedule and trust it's right for us. I go through and edit my plan about every 3 months or after anytime we take a break. This way my year plans are basic, and then I detail out smaller chunks and it ends up being more realistic and is more likely to be accomplished.

For you, schooling all year may or may not be practical, you may want to take off three months over the fall because you're having a new baby or moving - the point is that you need to do what works for your family. Just because you have to turn in portfolios or a form to your school during a certain day/week/month doesn't mean that's the day/week/month you have to start or finish homeschooling for the year.

Schooling how you want is part of why you homeschool, but you also need to remember that you can school when you want/need as well. Being able to follow your own schedule is one joy not to be missed. If it's something you're not sure about, be sure to pray about it and follow through with the answer you receive. One year may be different than the next, and we can only trust that God knows what's best for us.

Being able to pray about what curriculum to get, what schedule to follow, how to teach a child a subject that you're finding difficult, and any other question you have, is a wonderful relief from a heavy burden that we don't need to carry. God knows what we need, when and how - all we have to do is pray, give it to Him, and trust!

The Planner

Throughout my time home educating I've gotten and used several different types of planners, forms, and charts to use for organizing and record keeping. I always found myself wanting something a little different, either more simple for "this page" or more complex for "that page", printable or reproducible and pretty, but without guzzling my printer ink - so this is just the charts and pages that I created to use in my own homeschool that I designed from trial and error.

Also, since we homeschooled in Pennsylvania - there were certain pages we needed for that - different ones at the beginning and end of the year. Now we live in a different state, so we need more pages that are different. I hope that I am now covering everything that is required across the country. If not, more will be added on the next update.

The main pages of planner are not intended for the school's records, though many of the more simplified ones are to be used for the school - you should only send in your states minimum requirements. You also don't have to use all of these pages or look at all these pages and think you have to document every little thing - just use what you want and need each year, for each child. These pages are for you to customize your own plan, however you want, and hopefully will cover your states requirements. I simply added several different options for you to choose from. You may want to use one kind of plan during elementary age and then change to a different style for upper grades, or even for different children. Over the course of homeschooling your plans, styles, and methods always change, and that's ok.

Included are a few year-at-a-glance calendars, which I always find helpful for reference in my planning binder throughout the year. The first planner in each section has shown how I have found it easiest to divide my subjects, and there's a blank one for you to customize.

Year-at-a-glance calendars can always be found free on our website.

What I do first is make notes from our curriculum - or whatever books we're using and the year-at-a-glance calendars. Then I transfer that information into my individual subject objectives. From there into the quarterly planner and then finally to the daily planner by units, chapters, pages and individual lessons.

Then, I use the weekly chore chart and daily schedule in conjunction with the daily planner and hang them up together so the kids can always see the general time frame for things especially since we often have to change it around depending on my husband's work schedule.

The basic one-page objective is the one I used for the school at the beginning of the year in Pennsylvania, and I kept it very general. Most of the other pages are all for my personal planning to help me break down days/weeks to spend on each subject/curriculum.

There is a letter of notification, which is needed for some states. If you have to send this type of letter it's been recommended that you should send it certified with return receipt - and/or print a copy of the delivery information if you do online tracking.

There is also an end of the year evaluation form and portfolio covers for states where you need them, personal health and dental records and many other pages for your children's personal records, along with some biography pages, book reports, spelling and vocabulary lists.

The Greek and Latin root words pages go well with English from the Roots Up - we prefer to use pages rather than note cards and each child creates their own notebook.

Planning your home education program can be done easily if you do it in steps. You don't have to be worried that you aren't covering enough because you're not filling in all the blanks or using all the pages. I always started with the big, yearly picture and work my way down.

There are some homeschoolers who recommend starting at 12th grade and working your way backwards, others who go by the every 4 year plan to be sure everything is covered - both are great methods that you may want to give consideration.

Regarding a general 12-year plan - my favorite page is the Yearly Course Plan because it became one of the most freeing pages for our curriculum budget and general plan. I used to only plan one year at a time and I had wish-list pages that I've always kept. Often it looked somewhat depressing because it was so long - because I wanted to get "this book" for this and "that book" for that subject and it was just unrealistic to have every supplement because it can be used.

Using the Yearly Course Plan, I brought my curriculum wish list to a realistic and manageable level that actually fits in the budget because I can see what books I need for each child at each grade level. If I would have gotten all the curriculum I thought I wanted my kids would be doing homeschool 10 hours a day, 6 days a week, until they were 20. Fortunately there were times where we didn't have the money to get certain books/curriculum - which looking back I see God definitely had his guiding hand in there and am thankful, I'm sure my kids are too.

If you are anything like me and your wish list is a bit overwhelming, then I do recommend that you give that page a try and see how things look for you. If you have younger children and you're just starting out you may want to only plan the first 6 or 8 years and then have a very general plan for the next 6 or high school years.

Always remember that nothing is set in stone - it's your plan and you can change it! What's important is that you do what will work for your family, and this will most likely change as the years go by, I know it has for me.

Enjoy!
